When I go to the new site it thinks I'm logged in, and recognizes me as "Northeastern University," although I don't seem to be able to actually contribute anything (not that I'm sure what I could/would contribute).. I like the article layout better than the traditional encyclopedia site Another good thing and a plus over Wikipedia is that all the content will be signed and contributors (yes, that means you!) will submit a profile, no anonymous posting allowed.

It looks like the user-contributed content will appear side by side with their original content (which will be marked "Britannica checked" to distinguish it from the flotsam and jetsam of the hoi polloi).. From an announcement today by Acting Dean of Libraries Will Wakeling: I am excited to be able to tell you all of a great honor which has been bestowed on one of our colleagues and co-workers.. That it's developing what seems to be a parallel site in which end-users can contribute content to the Encyclopedia as they do in Wikipedia.
